Global Caché and Matrix Ingenuity Announce Reseller Agreement

Matrix Ingenuity to offer Global Caché Network Adapter with Interactive Training, Communication, and Presentation Solutions

Jacksonville, OR– February 25, 2005 – Global Caché, a leading provider of products that enable technology in homes and businesses, and Matrix Ingenuity, a supplier of interactive communications and collaborative systems announced today they have signed a value added reseller agreement enabling Matrix Ingenuity to bundle the Global Caché GC-100 Network Adapter with its multimedia instructional solutions.

Global Caché's products include the GC-100 Network Adapter which allows IR, serial, and relay devices to be controlled over a network; products that allow IR signals to be learned and sent over a network, sensors, and other IP enabling devices. Matrix Ingenuity provides interactive instructional and presentation solutions to government, educational organizations, and corporations.

“We're very pleased to be partnering with Matrix Ingenuity,” said Walt Keller, Global Caché President. “They are a solutions and training oriented company, primarily targeting educational facilities and the government. These are two market segments that require special understanding and expertise. It is extremely important to qualify in a priority category when selling to the government, as Matrix Ingenuity does. With this new alliance we can now better serve those markets.”

Matrix Interactive President, Theresa Naumann, said, “We are so pleased to be integrating Global Caché technology into our product offering and expanding the capabilities of our solutions. By adding the GC-100 Network Adapter, we can instantly IP enable previously un-networked devices. Using the GC-100 and Simtrol software we can now offer networked system maintenance and control to our systems. All features our customers have been asking for.”
