Global Caché Signs National Distributor

GC-100 Home Network Adapter to be Sold Through Worthington Distribution

San Jose, CA and Las Vegas, NV USA – November 18, 2002 – (Lunch@Piero's/COMDEX Fall 2002) Global Caché, a provider of products that enable technology in homes, announced today that it will begin selling the Global Caché GC-100 Home Network Adapter through Worthington Distribution, a national distributor of home automation and system integration equipment and supplies. Global Caché's hardware addresses the growing number of homes with high-bandwidth Internet and networking capability and enables the use of network-based software to control and automate diverse devices throughout the home, eliminating the need for costly and complex proprietary systems. Additionally, the Global Caché GC-100 replaces the current requirement for installers using open systems to piggyback different devices from several vendors with one easy to use product.

"We recognized right away that the GC-100 filled a need for our dealers and integrators to simply and economically connect infrared devices, as well as other types of devices, directly to a network," said Richard Scholl Jr., President of Worthington. "A product like this didn't exist on the market prior to the GC-100, and we think it's going to be an important enabler for our dealers to further expand their market into middle income homes. With products like the GC-100 becoming available, the home automation market is no longer just for the wealthy and integrators and dealers don't need to rely on expensive and time consuming certification training for their employees to be able to install the products."

"We're pleased to have signed up a national distributor like Worthington that focuses squarely on serving and supporting the home automation system integrator with products that are very compatible to ours," said Robin Ford, Global Cache's VP of Business Development. "It was clear from the beginning the people at Worthington are experts in home automation with extensive experience in system integration and that they would be an excellent distributor for our products."

The GC-100, which previewed to rave reviews at CEDIA in September, will begin shipping at the end of November. For pricing and availability please contact Worthington Distribution at 800-282-8864 or online at www.worthdist.com.
